Our children are the first generation to spend their entire childhood in the age of the smartphone, and this fact alone seems to have an important impact on who they are and how they relate to the world. More than previous generations, they are obsessed with safety, focused on tolerance, and have no patience for inequality. They also may be "on the brink of the worst mental health crisis in decades."

In this lively talk we will explore the idea that iGen is growing up more slowly than previous generations and facing a unique set of challenges as a result. We will also discuss practical tools we, as iGen's primary caregivers and advocates, can utilize to meet the developmental needs of our children and encourage their independence and autonomy.
