Rebecca Riddell is Advisor to the UN Special Rapporteur on extreme poverty and human rights, and a proud alum of Austin Montessori, where she attended both the elementary and adolescent (middle school) programs. She went on to the LBJ Liberal Arts and Science Academy for high school, and then to study political science at Kenyon College in Ohio. After graduating from Kenyon, Rebecca was a Fulbright English Teaching Assistant in Thailand, after which she continued to travel and work in various countries before returning to Austin to work as a cook and server at Lenoir Restaurant (friend of Austin Montessori) for a couple of years. In 2012, she left Austin to attend NYU School of Law, where she focused on international human rights law. She took that training to a position at Human Rights Watch, and then clerked for the Honorable James L. Cott in the Southern District of New York, before landing her current position at the United Nations.

Rebecca visits Austin regularly from her home in New York to visit family, including her niece, Eva Largent, and two nephews, Jack and Sam Largent, all of whom all currently attend Austin Montessori School.
