End of Japanese isolation

9-12 Grades AP World History 1750-1900

This activity is sponsored in part by the Library of Congress Teaching with Primary Sources Eastern Region Program, coordinated by Waynesburg University.

Two to three class periods of 45-60 minutes

Description of activity: Students examine and analyze primary sources, debrief with class discussion, and as a summative assessment, students write an essay (or create an explain everything that also incorporates a given number of images) to answer the prompt.

Focus Question: Why did Japan open up to trade with the West? What was the impact of their decision?

Context: To be taught within a unit on Japan after establishing the Tokugawa Shogunate.

Objectives: Identify and explain the impact of US intervention in Japan. Identify reasons why the Japanese agreed to open up trade and the impact that decision had on the nation of Japan.

Activity Details
Primary Sources: see below
Procedure: Students should take the link to the Library of Congress site and examine the documents carefully, zooming in as needed to see the pertinent details. They should also pay close attention to the accompanying information that is provided with each document. After careful examination, they should answer the questions provided and note any other observations or questions they have. Considering the large number of documents in this activity, the teacher may choose to assign certain groups of students to lead the discussion on particular sources. Following a class discussion reviewing all the documents, students will complete a summative assessment.

What you will need before implementing: Ideally all students will have their own devices and internet access. If that is not possible, you will need color copies of every document and description information on the back as well as paper copies of the activity.
