Lisa Masterson models Ellen Browning Scripps in her passion for helping and educating other women. As a student at Bishop's Lisa was a proud purple who loved French class and enjoyed being a Candystriper at Scripps Hospital – a foreshadowing of her life work. Her education pursuits took her to Mount Holyoke College and later to USC Medical School. Now, as a doctor in private practice with Cedars-Sinai Hospital in Los Angeles, Lisa specializes in obstetrics, gynecology, infertility, adolescent gynecology and family planning. In addition, she dedicates time to education about women’s health issues, serving as an advisor on the Oprah Winfrey Show as well as contributing to countless panels and articles. But Lisa doesn’t stop there. In 2005 she and Stephen Masterson founded the Maternal Fetal Care International (MFCI) to help mothers and children survive and enjoy better health in the poorest regions of the world. Through MFCI volunteer physicians treat needy women and children and provides training to local healthcare personnel to elevate the standard of available medical care and decrease mother-child transmission of HIV/AIDS. For the impact that Lisa has on the lives of others, Bishop's recognizes and thanks her for making a difference.
